Supported by IOM and by UNAIDS

IOM is committed to the principle that humane and orderly migration benefits migrants and society. As an intergovernmental body, IOM acts with its partners in the international community to: assist in meeting the operational challenges of migration; advance understanding of migration issues; encourage social and economic development through migration; and uphold the human dignity and well-being of migrants.

HIV/AIDS Prevention and Care Programmes for Mobile Populations in Africa

1. Summary

Not enough information is publicly available about HIV/AIDS prevention and care programmes targeting mobile populations. In collaboration with similar UNDP-led efforts in South-East Asia and in South Asia, the International Organization for Migration (IOM) thus carried out a survey on HIV/AIDS programmes for mobile populations in Africa.

The survey was undertaken in order to obtain general information on HIV/AIDS programmes for mobile populations, but it may also allow the establishment a networking mechanism for organizations carrying out HIV initiatives among migrants and mobile populations. In addition, the survey may serve to assess common difficulties and best practices of such programmes, as well as to better plan strategies and initiatives for mobile populations.

The survey was conducted through a questionnaire, distributed by post, by hand, and online during July and August of 2000 and 2001.

In South-East Asia a similar and coordinated survey was carried out by the UN Regional Task Force on Mobile Populations and HIV Vulnerability, in collaboration with the UNAIDS-South-East Asia Inter-Country Team (SEAPICT). The survey, launched in the fall of 2000, was carried out online, through the Internet. The resulting list of organizations was published as: Mobile Populations and HIV Vulnerability – Inventory of Organizations<sup>1</sup> in February 2002. A similar coordinated survey was carried out in South and South-West Asia during the fall of 2001. Results are to be published soon.<sup>2</sup>

The present document gives a first overview of organizations in Africa dealing with migrant and mobile populations in the context of HIV/AIDS. It briefly describes the methods used for gathering data, then gives a general description of the programmes listed and the major “lessons learned” by the organizations that responded. The main body of the report lists the data provided by the organizations.

It is intended that the survey be ongoing. The questionnaire, in annex, may be photocopied, filled in and returned to IOM at the address listed.

2. Development and administration of the questionnaires

A questionnaire was developed by IOM Geneva in July 2000, in collaboration with the UN Regional Task Force on Mobile Populations and HIV Vulnerability in South-East Asia. For the Africa wave of the survey, the questionnaire and an explanatory cover letter were sent in June 2000 to 34 Ministries of Health and National AIDS programmes, as well as to ten IOM offices in African countries. In addition, some 50 cover letters and questionnaires were handed out at sessions touching on migration issues during the International AIDS conference in Durban in July 2000.

Fourteen questionnaires were returned to IOM Geneva from this first round. It became clear that proactive follow-up would be required in order to accumulate a significant number of responses. A small grant provided by UNAIDS in Geneva allowed the management and implementation of the survey to thus be moved to where more person-power was available, and closer to the field, to IOM offices in Pretoria and Addis Ababa. The questionnaire was revised, and also translated into French. The revised questionnaire gathers information on the types of programmes, methods used, setting in which the programme is being implemented, type of mobile and migrant population targeted, geographical coverage, funding arrangements, evaluation, main objectives of the programme, assistance needed and major lessons learned (see annex for the final version of the questionnaire).

Between April and July 2001, the revised questionnaire was sent to UN Agencies, Bilateral donors, International and National NGOs, NGO forums and selected research institutions in Africa, by post, by fax and by e-mail. In total, 650 questionnaires were sent out during both launches of the survey. The questionnaire was also posted on the e-mail list serves af-aids and safco in June 2001, and again in August 2001. Finally, the questionnaire has been continuously available on the IOM web site.

In total, 65 responses to both launches were received, of which 56 responses from 20 countries (including one country outside Africa) are included in this report.<sup>3</sup> Of the 56 responses, 25 questionnaires were filled in and returned electronically, whereas 31 questionnaires were completed by hand and returned by post.

3. Discussion

The main aim of the survey was to provide a networking tool, and publishing the responses constitutes the most user-friendly format for such a tool. The present section provides a broad overview of the information received, however. These are preliminary observations only since the survey cannot claim to have covered, or be representative of, all HIV/AIDS programmes that currently target mobile or migrant populations in Africa.

<sup>3</sup> Nine questionnaires were disqualified on the grounds that they were filled in by organizations, which, although they do implement HIV/AIDS prevention and/or care programmes, do not provide services for migrant or mobile populations.

3.1 Settings and geographical coverage

From this round of the survey, responses were received from 19 African countries and from one country outside Africa, i.e. Mexico. Concretely, 48 English responses came from 12 anglophone countries, seven French responses from six francophone countries and one response from a lusophone country. The majority of responses were received from Ethiopia and South Africa.

Questionnaires were sent to a number of different organizations in every African country. One should not conclude that countries from which no responses were received have no HIV/AIDS-related programmes for migrant and mobile populations: not all of the pertinent organizations may have received the questionnaire, or sent it back if they did receive it. In addition the communications infrastructure in many African countries, including the postal system, is not fully developed, which may have impacted on the reach of the survey and the number of responses received. It is worth noting in passing, however, that no responses were received from some countries, such as Botswana for example, where high incidences of migration are well documented and where the communication infrastructure is relatively good.

Among the responses received to date, only three organizations indicated that they are implementing programmes in regional blocks, such as Common Market for Eastern and Southern Africa (COMESA). Only four respondents indicated that they are implementing programmes which involve more than one country. The majority of respondents stated that they were either implementing programmes on a national level, or within one province. Nine respondents stated that they were implementing their programmes in a district or village/town/city.

Most respondents stated that they were implementing programmes either in Church groups, schools/high schools/universities or in the workplace. Far fewer indicated that they were implementing programmes in places where migrants may gather or transit, such as bus/train stations, sports places, or market places.

3.2 Types of programmes and target groups

A very large range of programmes responded to the questionnaire: at one end is a programme with a reported budget of millions of dollars and reaching up to six million people, at the other end are some programmes which reach only a small number of persons. Likewise, some of the respondents described once-off interventions carried out in the past, whereas others described programmes which were not yet active and still required funding, or future plans in general.

Although the “oldest” programme listed began in 1968, most of the programmes that filled out the questionnaire began between 1996 and 2000.

The majority of the organizations which participated in the survey up to now are implementing community approaches and education, or are programmes for providing Information, Education and Communication (IEC). Most produce their own materials.

Map: Location of Responding Programmes

Far fewer organizations implement counselling, testing and care programmes. More specifically, many organizations may include counselling in their programmes, but do not implement testing and care components. Very few responding organizations are carrying out large-scale research programmes, although many report including some elements of research. Only eight organizations indicated that they were implementing assessments of HIV/AIDS risk in migration situations.

Only ten organizations stated that they were implementing programmes for international migrants, and only eight of the organizations responding are implementing programmes for refugees. (It should be noted that no information was received in this survey concerning the several reproductive health programmes being carried out for refugees in Africa by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees.) Many organizations work with internal migrants, specifically with internal migrant workers and truck drivers. Other organizations indicating that they worked with migrants within one country stated that they worked with sex workers and street people, target groups which do not always explicitly constitute migrants.

Most programmes either targeted all age groups or youth, although relatively high numbers also specifically aimed their messages toward adults and adolescents. Children were explicitly targeted by only one responding programme. The overwhelming majority of responses received target both sexes.

3.3 Funding arrangements

The majority of those who responded to the question stated that they had budgets of US$ 10.000 to US$ 100.000. The second largest category of respondents indicated available budgets of between US$ 100.000 to US$ 500.000. Only five respondents stated that they had budgets of under US$ 10.000 and only three indicated budgets over US$ 500.000. Although only one programme indicated that it was self-sustained, numerous programmes stated that self-sustainability in the near future was their goal.

On the other hand, almost all organizations indicated financial difficulties and shortcomings. For nine programmes funding had already run out at the time of questionnaire completion. The majority of responding programmes indicated that funding was assured until some time during 2002. Only three stated that they had funding until 2003 and another three stated that funding was forthcoming on a yearly basis. Most organizations had plans to continue the programme either beyond current funding arrangements, or if funds had already run out, which mainly involved renewed fundraising.

Amongst the responses received to date, the majority of organizations receive funding from an international agency, mainly UN agencies. The second largest category of respondents receive funding from governmental donor agencies from developed countries and large NGOs. The third largest group of respondents receive funding from the community. Only very few respondents in this round of the survey indicated that they received funding from Provincial/Regional Governments or National Governments.

3.4 Evaluations

The overwhelming majority of the respondents stated that their programmes were being evaluated. Eighteen indicated that their evaluation was both internal and external, ten that it was internal only, and three that the evaluation was external only. Twelve respondents stated that the evaluation entailed a baseline assessment and process and outcome evaluations. Amongst the 23 respondents who indicated that their evaluations entailed only one of these elements, process evaluation was the most frequent, followed by outcome evaluations and lastly, baseline assessments.

3.5 Major lessons learned by the organizations

This section presents an overview of the major lessons learned as listed by organizations responding to the survey. Where possible, the major lessons learned have been grouped. Of the 56 questionnaires received to date, 46 contained responses to the “lessons learned” question.

Only four similar “lessons learned” were cited by more than one organization. Four organizations stated that the most important lesson for them had been that the community should be included in the planning and development of the programme and that the community’s ownership of the programme was vital for successful implementation. Interestingly, all four organizations are South African and all four implement “education, information and communication”, “counselling, testing and care” and “community approaches” programmes, but with different target groups. Two target international migrants, whereas the other two target internal migrants. This was the only instance in which organizations with similar lessons learned work in the same country or region.

Three organizations mentioned that the most important lesson they had learned concerned the importance of networking and building partnerships. This centred not only on networking for information-sharing, but also for coordination purposes in the sense that it would assist organizations to implement work of a similar standard.

Another two organizations, one in Uganda and the other in Ethiopia, stated that they had encountered the resistance of Church Ministers to believe in the existence of HIV/AIDS, and that the strategies to work with or around this doubt had been their most valuable lesson. Both these organizations target internal migrants, and more specifically sex workers. Doubt in the existence of HIV/AIDS was also noted amongst traditional healers and within rural communities. Two organizations indicated that they were learning how to implement their programmes within that reality. Both indicated that despite their work, safe sex was still not being practised and that fear of stigma of HIV positive individuals continued to prevent persons living with HIV and AIDS from publicly acknowledging their status. Another organization echoed the need for community sensitization to reduce stigma.

Three organizations stated that the greatest lessons they had learned concerned the methodologies of how their programmes were being implemented. Two stated that the use of peer education had greatly assisted implementation, and another two mentioned that counselling had made their programme more successful. In this context, the organizations stated that success had increased as soon as the target group saw and became convinced that counselling was being done confidentially. Another organization briefly described the success it had, conveying HIV/AIDS prevention messages through music.

Three organizations mentioned that they had learned that care and support programmes were quite expensive and that they had realized that they had insufficient funds for such a programme. In general, many programmes stated that they lacked sufficient funding. One organization stated that it did not have enough funding to employ permanent staff and thus had to rely on volunteers. However, the quality of the work decreased as a result. Additionally, the target group was less responsive, because it perceived staff turnover to be very high. Another organization stated that as a result of low funds, it could not afford to present their work at conferences.

Two organizations mentioned that relying on other organizations/institutions for condom supplies had a negative effect, since supplies were often inconsistent.

One organization stated that it had learned that young women were more open to HIV/AIDS prevention messages than young men. Another organization stated that the most important lesson was to incorporate older people into spreading HIV/AIDS prevention messages, since they had “good moral values”.

One organization indicated that it had overcome bureaucratic barriers by means of negotiation and awareness raising.

It is interesting that the lessons learned reported by the organizations responding to the questionnaire were generally not specific to the context of migration. The lessons learned concerned factors experienced by many organizations dealing with HIV/AIDS prevention and care issues in general, rather than being specific to mobile populations. At the same time we note several comments that are particularly relevant to working with migrant or mobile populations. These include the importance of peer education (sometimes the only way for an outside organization to get through to a particularly hidden group), the importance of maintaining strict confidentiality when carrying out counselling (for some migrants having HIV infection become known can result in loss of the right to reside in a country) and finally the importance of fighting against stigma and discrimination (particularly important when the potential for stigma is double, as a migrant or a foreigner, and as someone living with HIV or AIDS).

4. Conclusions

As already discussed, the present survey of HIV/AIDS prevention and care programmes for mobile populations has experienced a return rate of somewhere under 10 per cent (650 questionnaires sent out, plus questionnaire distributed through the internet). Although this is not a bad response rate for an unsolicited and somewhat time-consuming questionnaire, the results can be considered indicative only: the survey does not pretend to be representative. For example this first round of the survey does not necessarily permit any conclusions concerning programming gaps in terms of geographical coverage.

That said, the results do permit some tentative observations:

- Amongst the responses received by IOM to date, most participating organizations are implementing programmes for populations that are mobile within one country. The low number of actively implemented programmes for international migrant and mobile populations in Africa stood out. Given the high numbers of refugees in Africa, and the high incidence of migration, especially international labour and undocumented migration, it was striking that very few programmes (in the case of refugees) or no programmes (for international labour migrants) were explicitly listed for these populations. The same observation is applicable to demobilized soldiers, victims of human trafficking, internally displaced persons and returnees.
- Financial difficulties and shortcomings were reported by almost all organizations which responded. Funding problems were undoubtedly at the root of one organization's reported recourse to volunteers, a staffing solution that can be very effective – or lead to problems of staff motivation and turnover, and credibility problems with clients. Funding problems were also behind organizations' inability to attend conferences in specific and to network, share information and permit programmes to become known in general.
- Funding came mainly from outside agencies and governments: very few programmes were funded by the governments of the countries in which they were carried out, and the most frequently reported mechanism for continuation was “renewed fund raising”. Sustainability might thus be an important concern.
- On a more optimistic note, numerous programmes stated that self-sustainability in the near future was their goal. One of the most frequently-reported lessons learned concerned community ownership, and also the beginning thereof, the importance of including the target community in the planning and development of the programme. Similar themes were echoed in other lessons learned, including the importance of networking and of building partnerships.

In sum

The survey provides some first insights into the work that is currently being done in the context of HIV/AIDS and migrant and mobile populations in Africa. At the same time it is hoped that the survey will give rise to a first networking tool for organizations involved in – or interested in – such work. The programmes which target these populations need to share information and to make their work better known. Most produce their own materials: they could possibly share, or at least compare, such materials. They need to exchange information on their approaches, their successes and lessons learned in general and learn from one another. The active exchange of information could form an important element for organizations in the process of developing migration-specific interventions, as well as for increasing “best practise” initiatives for mobile populations.

In this sense, it is important to devise methods and means for such exchanges to take place. This survey (and its “sister” efforts in South-East and South and South-West Asia) are a first step. It is hoped that, in a recursive process, the reports concerning the surveys will stimulate more responses, for more material in a subsequent wave. Readers are thus warmly invited to fill out the questionnaire in appendix, and to return it to IOM for Africa (somewhat different questionnaires for Asia can be obtained from UNDP at the addresses given).

The next section of this report lists responses exactly as they were received. It should be noted that IOM does not necessarily promote all of the approaches listed by the respondents. Questions for which there was no information received from a given organization are omitted for that organization in the listing.

Questionnaire on HIV/AIDS Prevention and Care Programs for Mobile Populations

This survey seeks to identify HIV/AIDS prevention and care programs being carried out with migrant and mobile populations. (These include refugees and IDPs (internally displaced persons)). It will serve as baseline data, and also give rise to a tool by which field workers might contact others doing similar work. The survey is simultaneously being carried out in Africa and in Southeast Asia.

Please take a few minutes to answer a few simple questions about your program. If your organization runs several programs please make copies of this form and fill in one for each.

Re: Survey of HIV/AIDS programmes for mobile populations (Africa wave)

Dear Colleague,

We would like to ask for your help in a survey of HIV/AIDS prevention and care programmes for migrants and mobile populations. The survey is being conducted throughout Africa and will gather information on the organisations or institutions involved in such programmes, as well as on the programmes themselves.

Background:

In the early years of the HIV/AIDS epidemic, governments' main concern was that migrants might bring HIV with them when they entered countries. Today, however, there is increasing recognition that, because of the situations they encounter as they travel and in the countries in which they are living, migrant and mobile populations may be more vulnerable than local populations to acquiring HIV. In turn they may take the infection back with them when they return to their homes. The specific needs and vulnerabilities of such populations are thus receiving increasing attention in regional and national AIDS programmes, as well as from non-governmental organisations. This survey is intended to gather information concerning HIV/AIDS prevention and care programs already addressing these populations.

Who is involved in carrying out the survey:

In collaboration with UNAIDS, the survey is being carried out in Africa by the International Organisation for Migration (IOM). A similar survey is being carried out in Asia by the UNDP/UNOPS South East Asia HIV and Development Project.

Who is targeted by the survey:

The attached questionnaire is being sent to National AIDS programmes, AIDS Service Organisations, national and international NGOs, migrant NGOs, international organisations and other relevant organisations.

What will be done with the information:

Having information about HIV/AIDS prevention and care programmes for migrants and mobile populations is important for both advocacy and for information sharing. Knowing what programmes already exist is essential to highlight gaps, and for strategic planning. More importantly, the survey will create networks of exchange between programmes, Government Departments, NGOs and other institutions/organisations involved in HIV/AIDS and mobility.

Do you have information that could help with the survey?

We would like to ask you to take a few minutes to fill in the enclosed questionnaire. It can be filled out either electronically and sent back by email or printed and sent back by post to the address below.

Please feel free to make copies and fill out several if your organization runs several programmes. We would also very much appreciate it if you would send this message and the questionnaire to others you may know who are working on HIV/AIDS prevention and care programmes for mobile and migrant populations. A first round of questionnaires was sent by IOM Geneva during the summer of 2000: the questionnaires returned at that time will be integrated into in the present survey. It is not necessary to fill out the questionnaire for a second time, but of course anyone who may wish to fill in this new version is welcome to do so.

Please do not hesitate to contact us at the address below with any questions you might have.

Thank you very much for your participation in the survey.

Best regards

Objet : Enqu4te sur les programmes relatifs au VIH/SIDA pour les populations mobiles (Afrique)

Cher coll4gue,

Nous souhaitons solliciter votre aide pour une enqu4te consacr4e aux programmes de pr4vention et de soins relatifs au VIH/SIDA 2 l'intention des populations migrantes et mobiles. Cette enqu4te, men4e 2 travers l'Afrique a pour but de collecter des informations sur le type de programmes impliqu4s aupr4s des organisations et les institutions concern4es.

Contexte :

D4s le d4but de l'4pid4mie de VIH/SIDA, la principale inqui4tude des gouvernements 4tait que les immigrants soient porteurs du VIH 2 leur entr4e sur le territoire national. Aujourd'hui, cependant, il appara4t qu'en raison des conditions qu'elles rencontrent dans leurs d4placements et dans les pays o4 elles s4journent, les populations migrantes et mobiles peuvent pr4senter face au VIH, une vuln4rabilit4 accrue par rapport aux populations locales. Qui plus est, elles peuvent constituer un vecteur d'infection 2 leur retour dans le pays d'origine. C'est pourquoi la vuln4rabilit4 particuli4re et les besoins sp4cifiques de ces populations re4oivent une attention croissante dans le cadre des programmes r4gionaux et nationaux consacr4s au SIDA. Cette enqu4te a pour but de r4unir des informations sur les programmes de pr4vention et de soins relatifs au VIH/SIDA qui ont d4j2 4t4 mis sur pied 2 l'intention des populations migrantes et mobiles.

Qui participe 2 cette enqu4te?

En collaboration avec l'ONUSIDA, cette enqu4te sera dans un premier temps men4e sur le continent Africain par l'Organisation Internationale pour les Migrations (OIM). Une enqu4te similaire est men4e en Asie du Sud-Est par le Programme conjoint des Nations Unies pour le d4veloppement.

A qui s'adresse ce questionnaire ?

Le questionnaire est adress4 aux organisations non gouvernementales (ONG's) nationales et internationales et autres organismes comp4tents s'occupant des migrants dans le cadre des programmes de lutte contre le SIDA.

A quoi servira l'information ainsi recueillie?

Il est important de disposer d'informations sur les programmes de pr4vention et de soins relatifs au VIH/SIDA pour les populations migrantes et mobiles tant dans une optique de sensibilisation qu'aux fins d'4change d'informations. Savoir quels sont les programmes existants en la mati4re est essentiel, autant pour faire ressortir les lacunes 4ventuelles que pour la planification strat4gique. De plus, cette enqu4te constituera pour les participants un instrument leur permettant d'entrer en contact avec des coll4gues effectuant un travail similaire, les organismes gouvernementaux, les ONG's et autres institutions ou organisations impliqu4s dans les programmes de lutte contre le VIH/SIDA parmi les populations mobiles.

Cette enquête devrait permettre la création de réseaux d'échange entre les divers programmes et partenaires concernés.

Si vous avez des informations utiles à cette enquête,

Nous vous prions de bien vouloir consacrer quelques minutes à remplir ce questionnaire. Vous pouvez soit compléter directement à l'écran et nous retourner par courrier électronique, soit imprimer et renvoyer par la poste à l'adresse indiquée ci-dessous.

Si votre organisation gère plus d'un programme dans ce domaine (populations mobiles et VIH/SIDA), nous vous serions reconnaissants de bien vouloir faire des copies du document (ou nous les demander) et de remplir un questionnaire par programme.

Nous vous serions reconnaissants aussi de bien vouloir faire suivre le présent message et le questionnaire qui l'accompagne à d'autres personnes de votre connaissance s'occupant de tels programmes .

N'hésitez pas à prendre contact avec nous si vous avez des questions à poser ou désirez apporter vos suggestions.

En 2000, certaines organisations ont reçu une première version de ce questionnaire et les résultats seront inclus dans cette enquête, sans que vous ayez à remplir à nouveau celui-ci.

Nous vous remercions beaucoup de votre participation à cette enquête.
Avec nos salutations les meilleures.

The vulnerability of mobile populations is increasingly recognized as an important dimension in relation to HIV/AIDS. Programmes for HIV/AIDS prevention and care for mobile populations are being established around the world. Such programmes deserve to be better known: they may share common approaches and difficulties, and could benefit from exchanges with one another.

This document lists the programmes for AIDS prevention and care for mobile populations in Africa that responded to a survey carried out in 2000 and 2001 by the International Organization for Migration, with support from the Joint United Nations Programme on HIV/AIDS. Similar surveys were carried out for South-East Asia by the United Nations Regional Task Force on Mobile Populations and HIV Vulnerability, and for South and South-West Asia by the United Nations Development Programme South-East Asia HIV and Development Project.
